

for a transfer down Main from that point.

"My car reached Eighteenth Street at five minutes to seven and Gregory had ample time to catch the 7:05 boat on the Old Dominion for Norfolk. Gregory called me by name, and I thought afterwards that he was hurrying to catch the boat, though he made no reference to it. I am absolutely certain of the hour, because Gregory compared his watch with mine and asked particularly about the time."

Railroad people at the freight office thought last night's howler was Gregory might have been there at 7 o'clock. They admitted that it was a question which a person could not recall with absolute certainty, and suggested that Whitmore might have got his time confused. But Whitmore's mind is clear on that point.

Found by Watchman.

D. C. Throckmorton, a fireman at the Virginia Railway and Power Company's power house at the foot of Twelfth Street, said yesterday that he was going home early Sunday morning when he found Gregory's letter, keys and papers on the city wharf. The business address in the letter was 300 East Main Street, which is how Gregory was picked up at Twelfth Street was incorrect. "I guess it was about 5 o'clock Sunday morning," said Mr. Throckmorton. "I had turned over toward the water, my attention having been attracted by the key and the letter. As I glanced down I saw the key and a letter to Mrs. Gregory, and half a dozen letters addressed to Gregory. They were not in a conspicuous place. I saw the letters addressed to Gregory in care of the automobile company, of which he is president, and that is how I got in touch with Mr. Tritton, the manager. The note to Mrs. Gregory was addressed in pencil. There was a business address in the upper left hand corner of the envelope, though I did not observe the printing clearly."

Hiddeuse Suicide Theory.

During the day the railroad people believed that Gregory left town at 11 o'clock Saturday night, and went over the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway, and a number of telegrams have been sent to Cincinnati in the hope of getting some trace of him there. No matter when or how he left, Gregory's matter was an expensive plaything, and a lot of people are not likely to be so ready to believe that he jumped in the river, and they regard this eleventh hour appeal to the police to drag his body as ridiculous and a needless expense on the city.

Regarded as Wealthy Man.

While Gregory's salary was only $92 a month, he spent money with a lavish hand, being regarded down town by men who did not know where he worked as a wealthy citizen of independent means. More than a year ago he took one of his friends that a motor car was an expensive plaything, and that one cost him more than $30 a month for its upkeep. He employed a white chauffeur. He always paid cash for what he bought, and he was one of the most liberal spenders in the leading business houses of the city. The public, therefore, has been unable to understand how he could live at such a swift gait without arousing suspicion in the office where he was in the habit of handling large sums of money on a nominal salary. His books were audited less than a year ago. It being understood that nothing out of the way was found on that occasion. But Gregory was regarded as a man of unlimited means as far back as two years ago, which leads to the belief that the total amount of his shortage will run four or five times higher than the railroad company has intimated heretofore.

OFFICERS ARRIVE AT CAMP LURAY

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.) Luray, Va., May 23.—Every detail for the comfort of the army school of instruction has been completed, and the camp is ready for business. There are eighty-one tents and a large mess hall. The latter has a seating capacity for 250. At least 150 officers are expected to participate in the manoeuvres, including nine instructors from the regular army. They will be in camp from the 24th to 31st. Brigadier-General Vaughan is in command, and is already here, as also is Surgeon-General Lynch.

The officers are arriving by every train, and by to-morrow night it is expected all the tents will be occupied. Colonel Leedy has been highly complimented for the location and arrangement of the grounds, which are said by those who have participated in former school manoeuvres to be the best that they have visited.

Will Vote on Big Bond Issue. (Special to The Times-Dispatch.) Charlotte, N. C., May 23.—In accordance with an enabling act passed by the last Legislature the city is to hold a vote on a bond issue of $365,000. The election will be held July 4, and the money, if the bond issue carries, will be devoted to schools, water works, streets and sewerage.

SCHOOL BOY LOSES LIFE. Drowns in Sight of Playmates While on Picnic. Charlotte, N. C., May 23.—In the presence of forty of his schoolmates, who were too panic-stricken to render him aid, Joe Wentz, fifteen years old, was drowned in the Catawba River, eight miles from here this evening. Wentz was seized with cramps, but cool and collected to the rescue, and his efforts at rescue were rewarded by his own death. The occasion was a picnic of city graded school pupils.

TODD IN ST. LOUIS HOSPITAL. Norfolk Man Has Only Hazy Recollection of His Trip. St. Louis, Mo., May 23.—George B. Todd, wealthy farm implement manufacturer of Norfolk, Va., whose family believed his body was at the bottom of Chesapeake Bay, was found today in the City Hospital.

He wandered from his home in Norfolk a week ago. He has only a hazy recollection of the trip to St. Louis, but believes he visited Washington and Cincinnati on the way.

Washington, May 23.—With a warning from Senator Root against any action on the part of the Senate until the House has passed a resolution for election of United States Senators by direct popular vote.

Mr. Root opposed the entire proposition to amend the Constitution as to senatorial elections, his especial objection being to leaving Congress of the supervision of senatorial elections. He thought popular election of Senators would result in the Senate's deterioration.

Mr. Williams said that Mr. Root, not only "distinguished, but notorious" for his inability, had not covered up the motives in retaining supervision of the senatorial elections. With the election transferred to the polls, said Mr. Williams, and Federal supervision retained, there would be exercise of Federal control when a Senator is to be elected, and he expressed surprise that Mr. Root should have suggested that Mr. Root should push his Southern allies into this unnatural position.

"Can no form of administration be adopted without demanding from the South some sacrifice?" asked Mr. Williams. Mr. Root replied that the motives in retaining supervision of the senatorial elections, and Federal supervision retained, there would be exercise of Federal control when a Senator is to be elected, and he expressed surprise that Mr. Root should have suggested that Mr. Root should push his Southern allies into this unnatural position.

Mr. Root explained that his substitute measure would only transfer from the State Legislatures to the people the duty of electing Senators, and promised to vote for the House resolution if his substitute failed.

corner-stone was laid by Mayor Seth Low. Since then criticism has been abundant, not always well informed and often conflicting. In great measure the public has been hampered in any true appreciation of the building as a whole by the fragmentary and ragged state of its approaches. The approaches have been cleared and the building stands free to the public gaze as the architects planned.

The dimensions of the building are imposing in themselves, but much as has been written about it there is singularly little authoritative critical comment on its architectural merits or defects. An exterior dignified and general opinion holds it nobly adequate. For interior spaciousness and unity, it is felt, perhaps, to fall below the Boston Public Library as a pure monument of beauty, but to exceed any other building of its nature in the world for combined beauty and utility. In general the style is a blend of the Italian and French Renaissance, and Gustave Kobbe has characterized this blend as "thoroughly harmonized and made congruous, not merely conglomerate. The result," he says, "is artistic and beautiful."

Built of White Marble. The exterior is exclusively of white marble. Very little of anything else has been used inside or out, although colored limestone and woodwork have been employed in decorative and accessory details. The library stands 390 feet long on Fifth Avenue and 270 feet deep. Omitting the two interior courtyards, carved out of the main block for light and air, it covers a superficial area of 115,000 square feet. When the interior is completed, it will take 300,000 tons of white Vermont marble to build it, not counting 150,000 cubic feet rejected because of flaws. All the marble was exposed to the elements for a year or more to test its qualities of endurance.

The main entrance opens from Fifth Avenue upon the rotunda, a room which, though impressive in its purity of design, and dignified in its simplicity, disappoints some critics as lacking in spaciousness for the introductory to a structure of such huge proportions. The architects, on the contrary, felt the room adequate in itself, and every where bore in mind the needs of a building of this kind. They kept the way and corridors severe and simple. They laid the floors in marble and tiling, to withstand the tread of generations richly, but they made no contracts for mural paintings, a conspicuous contrast from the temple of the Boston and the Congressional Libraries. In this instance, it was felt wiser to leave blank panels, which may be filled as the artistic consciousness of the city, the commemorative needs of the day and the private munificence of the city.

Masterpiece of Convenience. As a mechanism, as a masterpiece of convenience, the library is believed to be without equal in the world. It has facilities both ordinary and extraordinary never before attempted. There is a reading room for the blind. There is a charming little room for children, with diminutive chairs and low tables, quite in the manner of a nursery, over which a motherly superintendent will have charge. There are eight private rooms for the use of scholars. It was remembered, for instance, that Rear-Admiral Mahan wrote his monumental works on the influence of sea power almost entirely in the public rooms of the Astor Library.

But the crowning glory of the edifice is the great reading room, the largest in the world, on the top floor at the rear, surmounting the stack room. It runs 235 feet in length, 77 feet in width, and stands 50 feet high, with ceiling painted to simulate the clouded sky. Bisecting it is a double read-across, 81 feet wide and divided into arches, the purpose of which is to serve the delivery staff, to each member of which one of the arches is appointed.

The books themselves, the treasures around which the rest of the library is built, are housed in a stack-room directly beneath the main reading-room, comprised of seven stories, each seven feet high. They have an impressive monotony of perspective, regular, severe and almost surgically exact. The framework is of steel and the shelves of bronze. No reader, however privileged, will be allowed inside. His call all will come down to the attendants through one of many pneumatic tubes, and elevators will carry the book he wishes to read. There are sixty-three miles of shelves in the stack-room alone, and twenty-seven miles more in other rooms devoted to special departments, making ninety miles of shelf-room in all.

Unlike so many modern buildings, the New York Public Library is built as the ancients built, for eternity. The vault of the rotunda is a true vault, not a veneer hung from supports above. The walls are solid masonry. The roof is masonry, tiling and metal. Steel has only been used where the masonry would have been weak. The millions that went into it will endure, and as the library is enriched from year to year by gift and legacy, it will grow in beauty and usefulness.

discussions that a tariff for revenue is good Democratic policy sanctioned by all authorities, and that nowhere in the Democratic policy is there requirement for abolition of tariff duties to a point where such action would be followed by a deficit in the revenue.

It is freely stated about the House that William J. Bryan is in thorough accord with this view, and that the efforts of the committee to conserve the revenues, while at the same time fulfilling the Democratic pledge to the people of reducing the tariff, meet with his approval.
